Corporate Social Responsibilities

Coronavirus Is Putting Corporate Social Responsibility to the Test – Our world has been upturned the last few weeks, and with each hour, we find new information being hurled at us. Updates continually cross all mediums and channels of communication. It is a unique time in history for us as we are united in a global, shared experience.

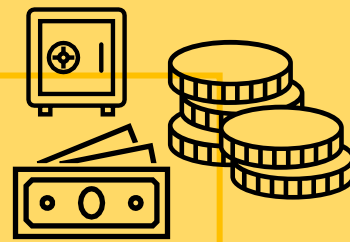

We believe that during these uncertain times, these programs will help our employees engaged and could attract new talent as our society and economy works to restore normality. How a company reacts and responds will make an impact on its workforce and the communities it serves. People are looking to their local, state, and immediate everyday company leaders for how they are responding and treating their employees.

At the most basic level, people come to work to put food on the table for their family. But work is about more than a cubicle. However motivated or passionate, engaged workers, aka “happier” workers, resulting in a better bottom line. “If you treat employees well, this then creates a social contract whereby those employees work harder, tend to be more efficient, and generally strive to do more for the company that’s treating them so well.” – Forbes

As we all settle into a new normal of social distancing and working from home, our understanding and perspective of what engaging employees and feeling connected and belonging within our company are taking on a new meaning. It isn't just a small fraction of employees working remote anymore; your entire workforce is physically distanced from one another.

Workers Welfare Fund

On 1st of April, TGH has successfully raised a Welfare Fund due to CoVid-19.

The purpose of the fund raising is to provide some basic needs (dry food) for our 95 General Site Workers who is staying in our hostels at various locations.

As a result, we managed to collect RM3,315.00 in total to support them during this Movement Control Order period. We thank each and every one of you who contributed.

April Babies

The whole team wishes you guys the happiest of birthdays and a great year. Wishing everyone an amazing year that ends with accomplishing all the great goals that set. Happy Birthday!
